"When" it adds, "a new country was conquered, say by CLIVE, with 3,000 men, or a 'hidden' capital entered like Pekin, by a few brigades of English and Frenchmen. or a vast State like Persia compelled to submit to Outrass and his few men, or Japan compelled to alter her whole policy by a few war-ships, the inferiority of the Asiatic organisation was acknowledged; but the superstition only altered its locale." But still the idea has always been provalent that somewhere or other an army would be found in Asia capable of defeating Europeans. This idea the Spectator ridicules as unfounded; hold her lead to the Chung has mark-boat, and said :- Gentlemen,-Having the experience but curiously enough, in the portion of the and rounded about a minute ahead of Wave, article which we reproduce further on, it Naiad about two-minutes astern of Wave, feeling in respect to the steamer Glenlyon, and seems to have caught something of the alarmist feelings which have of late become stood towards Stone-cutters' Island, Aura con- have been committed during a heavy typhoon, the fashion on this score, and speculates whether we may not linve some day a severe battle to fight with the Chineso. It seems really astonishing to read such a speculation in a journal usual- ship-shape, set spinnaker, and, although the the discrepancies in their statements in the ly so well informed as the Speciator. The whole history of China shows that the hypotheses suggested are simply impossible; China never could have a sufficiently large army to offer any resistance worthy of the name to Europeans, for the simple reason that the nation is far too much divided against itself. The " bremendous defeat of the Chinese Mahommedans in Yunnan," of which mention is made as an illustration of Chinese prowess, is certainly a very bad instance in point, The Mahomniedans had offered successful resistance to the Chinese for something like ten years, and were only three days' pay, and to return to his duty. defeated ultimately by stratagem and treachery; and the very fact of there having indicates the point at which it would always be purted. impossible in China to organise any military or naval force which could compete with against itself. BEFORE THE HON. CHIEF-JUSTICE SMALE AND

Exparte Landstein v. The King of Annam. The Chief-Justice, on taking the Beach, said that Mr. Stephens had written a letter to the Registrar of the Court, stating that it was intended to abandon the motion. His Lordship thought this was most irregular, as th Court should not be addressed by letter. Mr. Drumwood said that as he had appeared on the original summons, he might point out that the course adopted was, according to Archbold, the proper one to pursue. The Obief-Justice, however, said that ought not to be done by letter. Mr. Justice Pauncefote said it was quite clear that if nobedy appeared on an adjourned motion, it should be diamissed with costs. Mr. Drummond then stated that the terms of abandoning the motion were that the party taking out the motion should pay the costs; and that all affidavits connected with it should The Chief-Justice said that Mr. Justice Witness, resuming said what he meant when Paunesfote suggested to him that taking the ec-moon Pass, she fired a salute, which was he said he spoke to a Chinaman on board, who affidavits off the file was entirely the act of the would not often occur that such a course would be necessary. THE "SPECTATOR" ON CHINESE

ARMAMENTS It is a strange, though an explicable change which has passed over these tribes, and indeed all Asiatic sovereignties, and it is difficult to resist the temptation of speculating whether it will be permanent. Are Russia and England -allied perhaps with Holland, which has a very distinct function to perform in Asia, and has just telegraphed that she means to go on performing it—really to mould these populations for centuries to come, absorbing their wealth, abolishing their politics, and training their people? or is the spell laid on these wast multitudes one which can be removed? As vet the answer is in the negative, for no attempt could be more desperately made to shake the West off than that which is called the mutiny, and none could have been more thoroughly suppressed. But Europe, nevertheless, has only a moral bold on Asia, which is daily losing its force. We cannot help an uneasy feeling that the moral voke is giving way; that the East is reckoning with its difficulties, or as it says, its enemies; that it is and determined if he could to reinstate the beginning to feel that if it knew the truth. strength might some to it. And Hongkong Gas Company's Shares -$65 per yet there we too good reasons for thinking that a very similar code of morality is prevalent among merchants who trade upon a much larger scale. We need not recall the notorious: facts which have thrown so much discredit upon our manufactures. What are we to think of it all? When it anddenly turned out three years ago that the military stores of men and material upon which the French nation relied in its need had been adulterated on a gigantic Fook-we to local trader. scale, we acknowledged that defeat was a natural penalty for widespread corruption. The complaint, indeed, is not a new one. Adulteration, though kee to local trader. the art may have been carried to un unprecedented pitch of refinement, has probably existed to local trader. as long as there have been such things as shopkeepers; and to justify any decided opinion upon the disease from which we are suffering, we should have to say whether it is becoming more virulent than of old, and is more prevalent amonyst ourselves than amongst our neighbours. That the first of these propositions is true is indeed highly probable from general considerations, and may suggest to moral philosophers some curious apeculations.

admit of an argument, and all consumers, to

to see the law rigorously enforced.

Ethical treatises and sermons of all kinds lay down moral rules in the most general terms, The commandment is that we should commit no murder, not that we should refrain from murdering a particular class of people. In practice, however, such laws are interpreted after quite a different fashion. We are always very slow to admit that we owe the same duties to all mankind. Everybody knows, for example, that the law against murder is frequently understood with strict limitations. A colonist in any wild country is very sceptical as to its having my application to aborigines. Or, again, to take a trivial instance, it is carious to remark the way in which a schoolboy interprets the duty of speaking the truth. The same boy who would be utterly ashamed of telling a deliberate talschood to one of his companions would think it a point of honour to deceive his masters upon certain subjects. In short, moral sense in its rudimentary stages is generally identified with some class feeling. The savings may be strictly virtuous in his conduct to his own family or tribe, and regard the rest of the human race as standing ultogether outside the pale of his symputhics; the artisan is equally sceptical as to his obligations to capitalists, and the shopkeeper about his duties to the whole world outside his doors. Now, whilst commerce has of late years extended with extraordinary rapidity, the development of a corresponding moral seaso has by no means kept pace with it. A shopkeeper ut the present day who should keep to the code of his grandfather, might in practice be a far greater rogue. Each of them would admit in terms that cheating was wrong; and each of them would in secret put in a saving clause to the effect that to sin really consisted in cheating your next-door neighbour. But then ! the grandfather lived in a world of next-duor neighbours. He was a member of a small society changing very slowly, cach of whom had not only a lively interest in his neighbour's honesty, but had the power of constantly keeping an eye upon him. If a diaryman adulterated his milk, he got a bad character within a little circle beyond which he had no power of looking; and therefore he was pretty certain of suffering very rapidly for any offences be might commit. If fate had put it in his power. to cheat a man living at the Antipodes, he THE GLOBE MARINE INSURANCE would possibly have felt very little scruple about doing it; but then fate never did put it in his power. A DUKE OF THE REGENCY There are few-such gentlemen now left in England as the Duke of Courthope; he was a nobleman of the best type, the very porcelain of human clay. He dressed, spoke, looked like a Duke, and could have hardly than that of a Duke. He really and truly could not say three words for bow to an acquaintance in the street, or write a letter, or do the smallest thing, like a common person. The accent of his voice was ducal; he spoke · in a loud, clear, counsanding manner, generally in a high-pitched, breezy tone, as if far thove opposition or remonstrance. If he had not been a duke such a mode of speech would his case it was merely characteristic, and not unbecoming. It was hardly possible he could have addressed an unknown cabman or a shopman in that manner, for they infallibly would and must have laughed in his face; but be had little to do with such people. He very rarely entered a shop where he was not known, or came at all in contact with the outside vulgar. He had his place distinctly marked and defined in the modern life of England .- Cornhill Magazine.

ENCOUNTER WITH A WHALE. Sometimes, particularly among the sperm whales, desperate characters are found, that without waiting for the attack, rush furiously against the boats sent out against them, and seem to love fighting for its own sake. Bennett describes an encounter of this kind which he witnessed in the South Sea. first effort of the whale was to rush against the boat with his head. Having been baffled by the crew steering clear, he next attempted to crush it with his jaws, failing again, through the unaccommodating position of his mouth; he remedied this defeat with much Sagacity, for approaching impetuously from a distance of forty yards, he turned inpon his back, raising his lower jaw to grasp the boat from above. A lance wound, bowever, applied in time, caused him to close his mouth, but continuing to advance he struck the boat with such force that he nearly overturned it, and again concluded by again turning on his back and thrusting his lower nw through the planks. Fortunately the other boats came up to the rescue, and an addition of many tons of sperm to the ship's Fire at current rates, subject to a bonus of 40 TOYCE'S SPORTING AMMUNITION. cargo made up for the damaged boat .- The per cent. . FASCINATED.

I cannot resist the pleasure of relating an original story. The beauty and attractiveness of the Queen had made a deep impression on the mind of an old member of the Parliament of Bordeaux, whose name was M. da Castelnan. All his good sense could not restrain him from an affection that was the more astonishing as he was no longer young, and he quite lost his head. All his happiness lay in getting a sight of the Queen, and he spont his life in the Gallery of Versailles, always alone, and reckoning the moments whou he might see her as she passed. He was very regular in attendance at her mass and no doubt prayer was not his only occupation then; on getting out of the chapel he ran to be in time to see her enter her rooms. If he heard her carriage, he was at the foot | buted annually to Contributors, whether Shipreof the stairs. He was not to be repulsed by holders or not, in proportion to the net amount the worst weather, and the sharpest frost of Premia contributed by each, the remaining could not repress his desire of gazing on the third being carried to Reserve Fund. object of his love. He was melancholy and silent, and would very seldom open out. However, I have conversed with him several times, and if we chanced to speak of the Queen he would make a simple and respectful culorium on her, and no more. When I went away he was still at Paris, and I know not what became of him, but several people have told me he was involved in the massacre of the 10th of August. - Recollections of a Page at the Court of Louis XVI.

CAPTURED GODS. In the days of Numa the people were pany, are prepared to grant Policies against much dismayed by the heavy rains, and the FIRE to the extent of $50,000 on any one First lightning fell thickly and frequently. So that the priesf-king consulted the goddess Egeria on the occasion. She bade him calm his fears, and told him that the lightning was to be averted by atouement, referring Tim for further instructions to Pieus and Faunus, Roman divinities, at the same time telling him that they would afford him no information except by compulsion, and that he must secure them with chains when he. aught them. At the foot of the Aventine hill there was a grove of oak, in the centre of which was a grassy plot and a constant stream of water trickling from the rock, which was covered with green moss. At this stream Faunus and Picus were accustomed to drink. Here Numa sacrificed a sheen, and then placed cups of wine about the fountain, concealing himself in a neighbouring grotto. - Presently the forest gods came to refresh themselves, but instead of water, drank the wine that had been laid for them; afterwards going to sleep. Then Numa issued from his hiding-place and fixed their hands in manacles. When the gods awoke they struggled in vain to free themselves. Then Numa stepped forward, and, selves. Then Numa stepped forward, and, asking forgiveness for what he had done, begged them to tell him how the lightnings let and 133 of the Articles of Association, and Perrins have been forged, Leand P. give notice that the lightnings of the Articles of Association, and Perrins have been forged, Leand P. give notice that asking forgiveness for what he had done, let and 15th instants, altering Clauses Nos. 130. asked them a question which they could not ber, 1871), the Net Profits of the Company will, attorney to take instant proceedings against Manufacanswer, but promised to summon Jove himself to his assistance if he would only free them from their bonds. Upon this Numa set them at liberty; whereupon the tops of the Aventine forest trembled and the earth vielded to the feet of Jove. Numa at first was overcome by the vision, but presently recovering himself, stated his desire. Jove then told him that he must "cut off a head." "Of an onion in my garden," said Numa "Nay, but of a man," said Jupiter. "Yes, the topmost hairs," said the other. "You must take a life," said fove. "The life of a fish," replied Numa. Jove, diverted with "the ingenious answers of Numa, laughed, and said, "See to it, then, that with these thou dost propitiate my missiles, thou man not to be daunted in a conference with the gods. Moreover, when to-morrow's sun shall have risen I will give thee the sure pledge of empire." This promise was fulfilled the next day in the full of the celestial shield, which was supposed to contain in its sufety the welfare of the empire : so that in order that it might not be carried away, Numa caused a Policies issued for long or short periods a number of counterparts to be made, preserving the secret of the true one.
